APOPLUS Invisible Cities and Greek City Ports of the Ionian: visual art dialogues between Greek litterateurs and Calvino

Alevrapothikes, Old Fortress of Corfu Island, 21 June - 07 July 2019

In the Flotilla fresco, the oldest known representation of a port found in ancient Thera excavation site, the eastern part is called Apoplus (sailing). The exhibition focuses on the exploration of this polysemic concept, creating a multifarious environment that refer to the port as an intermediate space, a threshold between the city and the sea. Metaphorically, port, city and sea will become the symbols for action, the inner world of man and the journey of life. The complex structure of the exhibition creates semantic frameworks, which the visitor is called upon to desymbolize in the experience of his wandering.

An important inspiration for the design of the exhibition was the text Invisible Cities of the Italian litterateur Italo Calvino, an exemplary presentation of the multifarious nature of the city-port. The text brings in a common narrative a variety of city descriptions that eventually appear to form the multiple facades of one and single city, Venice. In addition, through the dialogues and descriptions of the cities in the text, one can discover various other dynamic interactions, such as the dialogue between two cultures, let's say Greek and Italian, or the interaction of text and image. The Invisible Cities are fantastic. Through the exhibition they are invited to interact with the 'visible', real cities of the Ionian Sea as described in the work of Greek Ionian litterateurs, such as Kalvos, Solomos, Karyotakis, Hearn, Sikelianos, Martinengou, Polydouri, as well as with cities of Magna Grecia in Italy, through the corresponding 'Griko' musical tradition.

The design of the exhibition is inspired by Alevrapothikes, a building of cultural importance in the Old Fortress of Corfu, and aims to create thereby an atmospheric audiovisual environment, highlighting its unique aesthetic quality that combines elements, such as the stone architecture, the patina of time, the location in the trench. Alevrapothikes spaces, both indoor and outdoor, will be carriers of meanings, protagonists that embody roles and implement the narrative context of Apoplus. The perception of city–port will be formed through the interaction of images and sounds. The visitor of the exhibition will wander around and re-create fragments, forming multiple and flowing versions of Apoplus from the intertwinement of actions, experiences, narratives.

The curator of the exhibition Dr. Efrossyni Tsakiri
